SANDBOXING
Artefacts – interview talk constructed around individual objects and assemblages of photographs and collections of artefacts introduced topics that were beyond the interview schedule and provided new insights into the everyday negotiation of the maternal body

Photo-elicitation - disrupting the focus from individual experience to the dominant visual tropes that circulate, allowed connections between wider social representations of motherhood and the interactions and experiences of individual participants

Online image analysis - opportunity to articulate subtle forms of framing in relation to proximity, gaze and de-contextualisation that demonise mothers who are young or residing in marginalised areas, whilst creating untenable fantasies of the ideological mother and child

Timelines and emotion stickers - accounts that were biographical, current and future orientated, allowing a more nuanced understanding of the participants meaning making and approaches to parenting

Sandboxing – collaborative nature of the task allowed researchers to introduce aspects of their own experiences of ‘things that can’t be spoken’, in relation to alcohol consumption and other health related behaviours

Creative methodologies are not a panacea; but they can enable access to unseen and unspoken aspects of mothering, and engender forms of temporal and spatial extension
