

ID	What was your understanding of organ transplantation in Islam before you attended the	How has the presentation changed your understanding of organ transplantation in Islam?	Has the presentation given you a better understanding of the law related to organ	Would you promote and encourage organ donation after listening to the presentation?	What do you think are the barriers to organ transplantation for Muslims? would you kindly make some suggestions to how to overcome these
2	Was aware that there is a differences if opinions by various scholars on the ruling of organ transplant.	Really good! mashallah! It was explained really well and understood better. Wasn't aware of the fatwas given by several scholars	Yes definitely	Yes	Mainly culture and the social impact Muslims have from the elders. Some think the elders are "more knowledgeable" than scholars at times. If our predecessors have never done this
3	Very Little	Greatly	Yes	Not yet decided	The thought of someone cutting my
4	I was fairly neutral but airing towards the view of impermissibility except for when there is a genuine need.	I was convinced that it is a personal choice and will be deemed virtuous if the donor has a good intention.	Though I was aware of the opt in and out system, I felt that the presenter explained the laws really well with a timeline of where we are at in regards to OT law.	I would promote the idea that it is more of a personal choice where the Shariah doesn't oblige a person to do one or the other. I would encourage people on the fence to donate their organs as it can be very rewarding for them and be a source of reward after their death. However, I still hold the position that full	People think that is against the sanctity of the corpse to open it up PM. The terminology used to describe OD can be off putting (open you up, harvest your organs etc). But I think the biggest problem is that laypeople often consider OD to be contradictory to the laws of the Shariah and assume the laws are stringent in this regard. This can be a problem when their source of religious verdicts are migrant scholars who have
5	Not permissible how ever after the presentation I understand the whole issue better and can lean to the permissibility of Organ	Yes most definitely	Absolutely	Yes	Lack of information more of these presentations
6	My understanding was that organ donation was that it was not permissible to donate your organs in Islam.	It has provided a breakdown of the various perspectives and thoughts of organ donation and that there are valid points on both sides of the spectrum with regards	Yes a better and broader understanding that otherwise I wasn't aware of.	I would not directly promote organ donation, but rather provide the notion of the various opinions and that one can choose to donate or not to donate and allow	The general understanding amongst most Muslims is that its incorrect to donate your organs as this is what they have heard growing up and the only perspective provided, however we know this is not the case, so I would say

I was told that organ donation is not permissible due to the organs is a trust from Allah.	It has made me aware that this issue is not black and white as many scholars have made it out to be. Brilliant presentation on different views on this topic and whichever one follows is actually is an Islamic position. Also was amazed	Yes	Yes I would.
Researched a little bit into it. For e.g. maulana Khalid saifullah rahmanis works.	It's made me realise that there are evidences for each opinion which are all grounded in their own	Yes.	Yes.	It's what's been said to the Muslim community over the years since their arrival to the UK. Not sure.
